

EDI sponsors major Education and Skills Survey

EDI is delighted to be supporting the Confederation of British Industry's (CBI's) annual Education and Skills Survey.

The survey asks employers about skill levels and skills shortages, the education system and what would help their business compete during the recovery and beyond.

The CBI is the UK's leading business organisation, speaking for some 240,000 businesses employing around a third of the private sector workforce.

The survey will be particularly relevant during the election year, as it is read by policymakers and business leaders alike. It gives employers the chance to speak out nationally about the education and skills issues affecting their business.

Jenifer Moody, EDI Director of Education Development and Innovation, has urged employers to take part. She said: "This survey gives employers the opportunity to express their views on skill levels, whether the education system is delivering for their business and what they feel is most important for the future economy. By taking part in the survey, employers can voice their opinion to policymakers and influencers at this crucial time."

Susan Anderson, CBI Director of Education & Skills, said: "It is great to have EDI on board with this survey. They bring valuable insight as a leading provider of vocational and work-based qualifications, and share the CBI's aims of raising skill levels in the workplace for the benefit of the future UK economy."

The survey can be completed on the CBI's website, www.cbi.org.uk, before the closing date on 5 March. The results will be announced in May.

Watch the video clip of Jenifer Moody talking about the survey.

